WHAT OUR TRAINEES SAY ABOUT US...

POUV SITHAV
Project Coordinator
CEDAC, Cambodia

"It was the first time for me to participate in such a course and it made me more confident and equipped for my career. Especially food and nutrition security, log frame and rights-based approach were highly relevant to my field. I was happy to learn practices and solutions from other participants as well. This course was very important for my career."

OUTLINE

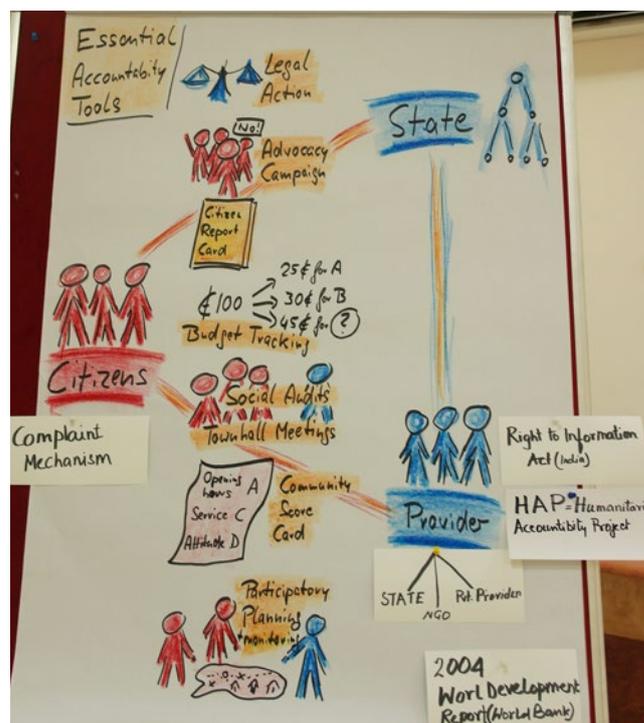

This advanced level course gives you practical guidance to develop effective and innovative programs towards ending hunger and poverty - from a rights-based perspective.

- Learn about best practices to improve livelihoods and behaviours of the disadvantaged, and enhance citizen empowerment and governance systems to advance social change
- Design impact-oriented interventions and winning proposals, become proficient in using analysis and planning tools, as well as developing monitoring and evaluation systems
- Reflect on your role as civil society actor and learn how to support innovation; guide and energize your team, and work in high-performing partnerships to reach your targets

The course includes two workshops with a total of 13 training days as well as one-to-one mentoring by the facilitators throughout a 4 month period.

BABITA SINHA
Programme Coordinator
Pravah, India

"The course has significantly affected my organisation's programme development as I was introduced to the process of participatory planning and setting up achievable indicators - we use these tools for all our projects. This course has not only helped me as an individual but also helped me extend my learning to my organisation."

FACILITATORS

JOACHIM SCHWARZ is the lead facilitator of the course and mentors participants. Joachim started his career with the UN before shifting to civil society. In Welthungerhilfe, he worked in leading positions in Ethiopia, Sri Lanka and as Regional Director for South Asia. He now works full-time for the CSA - in the roles of training developer, facilitator and coach for participants, among others. He has extensive experience in facilitating trainings related to leadership and management, as well as programme development.

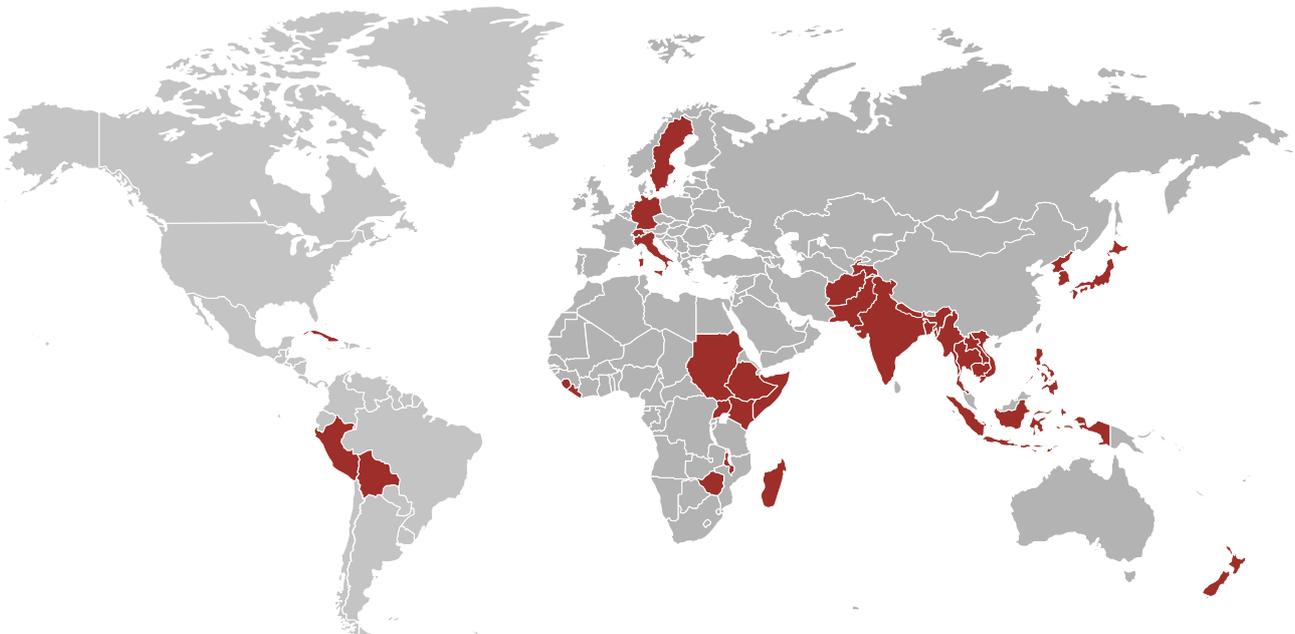

SWETA BANERJEE facilitates the course together with Joachim and mentors participants. She works as Nutrition Expert for Welthungerhilfe's India programme and also provides support to Welthungerhilfe's projects in Nepal and Bangladesh. Sweta has been working in the public health and nutrition sector for the last 20 years and has extensive experience of working in the community.

ABOUT THE CIVIL SOCIETY ACADEMY

The Civil Society Academy (CSA) started in 2014 as a dynamic and ambitious project of Welthungerhilfe. CSA consists of an international team that is highly motivated and strongly committed to the organisation's values: empowerment, social justice, and sustainable development.

In the past two years, we have reached out to more than 450 people from 34 different countries through a range of top-quality and affordable courses and trainings. Furthermore, we design and conduct tailor-made training for Civil Society Organizations upon request.
